9 Opportunities matched to you	2 Top priority this week	6 Product categories	3 Largest cluster: hot drinks
-----------------------------------	-----------------------------	-------------------------	----------------------------------

LaunchTrace reads the UK Intellectual Property Office trade mark journal every week, matches each food and drink applicant to Companies House, and keeps only the brands that look genuinely early-stage. This brief covers the opportunities from that week that are relevant to what Digimock sells. Every company here has protected a brand name in the last few weeks; none of them has been contacted, and none has asked to be introduced to a supplier.

THIS WEEK'S SIGNAL

Hot drinks is the largest cluster this week — 3 of the 9 relevant brands, including the strongest signal in the set, kWh Coffee. Snacks adds 2 more. The rest are single brands in bars, chilled and frozen, confectionery and sauces and spices.

PRIORITY OPPORTUNITIES

The full list, with filters and space for your own notes, is on the OPPORTUNITIES tab.

1. kWh Coffee	TOP MATCH
MORNING PEOPLE LTD · York · Coffee, tea and hot drinks
Product	Coffee — whole bean, ground, espresso, drip bags and coffee bags
Why now	Filed 25 Aug, published 11 Sep. First trade mark from a company incorporated 12 months before the filing. Already trading from its own site, with no multiple-retailer listings found.
Relevance	Coffee is a printed-pouch category. Film and bag formats are normally the first pack decision a hot-drinks brand makes, and usually across several SKUs at once. kWh Coffee is already selling from its own site, so pack is a live decision rather than a future one.
Sales angle	Short-run printed coffee pouches across multiple SKUs, with drip-bag and coffee-bag film as a natural second format.
2. Sami's Superfoods	TOP MATCH
SAMIS SUPERFOODS LTD · Sheffield · Snacks
Product	Nuts — roasted and salted, flavoured, nut butters, snack mixes and dried fruit
Why now	Filed 25 Aug, published 11 Sep. First trade mark from a company incorporated 5 years before the filing. Selling direct from its own site, with no multiple-retailer listings found.
Relevance	Nuts go to market in printed bags and pouches. A range with several variants means several designs, each at modest volume. Sami's Superfoods is already selling from its own site, so pack is a live decision rather than a future one.
Sales angle	Resealable printed pouches for the nut and snack-mix range — one short run per flavour rather than one long run.
3. BULLITT	STRONG
COLDHARBOUR FOODS LIMITED · Marlow · Cereal, protein and energy bars
Product	Energy bars
Why now	Filed 27 Aug, published 11 Sep. First trade mark from a company incorporated 6 months before the filing, covering a single product range. No website we could confirm.
Relevance	Energy bars are flow-wrapped. Wrapper film and artwork have to be settled before the first production run, not after it. There is no brand site we could confirm, so the pack format is likely still open.
Sales angle	First-run bar wrappers — flow-wrap film at launch quantities, while the artwork is still open.
4. GIGGLECHOC	STRONG
JOKE IT LTD · Portsmouth · Confectionery, chocolate and sweets
Product	Chocolate — sugar confectionery and dairy confectionery
Why now	Filed 28 Aug, published 11 Sep. First trade mark from a company incorporated 8 months before the filing, and the only mark they filed this week. No website we could confirm.
Relevance	Chocolate uses printed film, flow-wrap and pouches. A range that pairs sweets with other merchandise usually carries several small formats rather than one. There is no brand site we could confirm, so the pack format is likely still open.
Sales angle	Short-run printed film and pouches across a multi-SKU confectionery range, where no single line justifies a long run.

Suggested sales angles are LaunchTrace's view of how you might approach each brand. They are not requests, enquiries or stated requirements.

Why Relevant to You	Suggested Sales Angle
Coffee is a printed-pouch category. Film and bag formats are normally the first pack decision a hot-drinks brand makes, and usually across several SKUs at once. kWh Coffee is already selling from its own site, so pack is a live decision rather than a future one.	Short-run printed coffee pouches across multiple SKUs, with drip-bag and coffee-bag film as a natural second format.

Sami's Superfoods is already selling from its own site, so pack is a live decision rather than a future one.	Resealable printed pouches for the nut and snack-mix range — one short run per flavour rather than one long run.

Tea is a printed-pouch category. Film and bag formats are normally the first pack decision a hot-drinks brand makes, and usually across several SKUs at once. There is no brand site we could confirm, so the pack format is likely still open.	Small-batch printed tea pouches, with digital print keeping the quantity per SKU low while the range settles.
Energy bars are flow-wrapped. Wrapper film and artwork have to be settled before the first production run, not after it. There is no brand site we could confirm, so the pack format is likely still open.	First-run bar wrappers — flow-wrap film at launch quantities, while the artwork is still open.

Why Relevant to You	Suggested Sales Angle
Chocolate uses printed film, flow-wrap and pouches. A range that pairs sweets with other merchandise usually carries several small formats rather than one. There is no brand site we could confirm, so the pack format is likely still open.	Short-run printed film and pouches across a multi-SKU confectionery range, where no single line justifies a long run.
Vegetable crisps and fries go to market in printed bags and pouches. A range with several variants means several designs, each at modest volume. There is no brand site we could confirm, so the pack format is likely still open.	Printed snack bags across the crisp variants, with frozen-suitable film for the fry lines.
Yoghurt and dairy is mostly pots and labels rather than film. The granola, frozen and lidding formats in the same filing are the part that is flexible-pack work. The signals read pre-launch, so nothing is likely to be committed yet.	Lower priority for film. Worth a call if the granola or frozen lines come first, or for lidding and sleeve work alongside the chilled range.
Spices and seasonings reach shelf in glass or in pouches and sachets. Where a brand chooses pouches, it is flexible-pack work from the first batch onwards. The signals read pre-launch, so nothing is likely to be committed yet.	Printed pouches and sachets for the range — worth asking whether they have settled on glass or pouch before pitching a format.

How to use this report

Two minutes, and you will know what every column means.

What LaunchTrace detects

Every week the UK Intellectual Property Office publishes the trade marks that have been filed. A new food or drink brand almost always protects its name before it goes on sale. LaunchTrace reads that journal, works out which applicants are real UK food businesses, checks them against Companies House, and keeps only the ones that look like they are still building rather than already established. What you get is a list of brands at the point where their suppliers have not been chosen yet.

What "Why now" means

It is the timing evidence: when the name was filed and published, how recently the company behind it was formed, whether this is the first mark we have seen from them, and whether the brand has a website or retailer listings yet. It explains why this week is a sensible moment to make contact, rather than six months from now.

A lead is a signal, not an enquiry

Nobody on this list has contacted you, asked for a quote, or been told about you. These are companies whose public filings show a brand being built. Treat every row as a well-timed reason to introduce yourself, not as an inbound enquiry. Nothing here is a confirmed buying request.

How to use the suggested sales angle

The angle is our read on what this kind of brand, at this stage, usually needs from a supplier like you. It is a starting point for a first conversation — a sensible opening line and a reason to call — not a statement that the company has asked for that product. Check it against what you actually see on their website or filing before you use it.

Why some websites say "Not confirmed"

We only publish a website when we can prove it belongs to that company. If a search turns up a page that might be the brand but might equally be a similarly named business elsewhere, we leave the field as Not confirmed rather than send you to the wrong company. It is usually worth a quick search of your own — the absence of a confirmed site is often a sign the brand is genuinely early.

How to read Priority

TOP MATCH — the strongest launch signals of the week and a direct fit for what you sell. Start here. STRONG — a clear early-stage brand in a category you serve; worth a call this week. RELEVANT — qualified and in scope, but a partial fit; read the suggested angle before spending time on it. Priority combines how early-stage the brand looks with how closely its category matches your business, so it is specific to you and not a general ranking.

Working the list

The OPPORTUNITIES tab is a filterable table. Sort or filter by Priority, Product Category or Location to split the week between your team, then use the Owner, Sales Status and Sales Notes columns to track what happens. Those three columns are yours — LaunchTrace never writes to them, so your notes survive from week to week if you keep the file.
